A boy or a girl?

She grew up to have wavy, blonde hair.
And eyes that melt any heart.

Paul Davis voted to allow babies like her to be aborted based strictly on the gender of the unborn child. And for no other reason. At all.

Davis was in the extreme minority in the House to oppose legislation that would have made sex-selective abortion illegal. He even opposed banning abortions beyond the point at which the baby is medically proven to feel pain.

His radical views on abortion have earned him the endorsement of Planned Parenthood and thousands of dollars in campaign aid from the National Abortion Rights Action League.

In Davis' world, had her parents wanted a boy, the world would never see those curly blonde locks and piercing brown eyes.

Sex-Selective Abortion Is True War on Women
